Types of Cookies

Essential Cookies - some cookies are necessary for a website to work properly and relate to the core functions of the site. In most cases, because they are strictly necessary, consent is not required for such cookies. There are often options to turn essential cookies off via the browser or device itself, however users should be aware that the site may not function as expected if this is done.

Analytical Cookies – these cookies collect information about how a user interacts with a website and provide data for statistical analysis purposes. These cookies are optional and can be rejected or turned off by the user.

Preference Cookies - these cookies set the preferences a user chooses and remembers them for the next visit. These are optional cookies used to tailor certain website options to the user. They can be managed via the ‘manage cookies’ option.

Performance Cookies - these cookies provide us with statistics and information about how and when a user visits our website and which pages are accessed. This gives us data to offer a better service to users but can be turned off in the 'manage cookies' settings.

Security Cookies - these cookies are strictly necessary to protect both our website and users. They provide authentication for user accounts, fraud prevention and other forms of security.
